

Proclaiming Evidence for Truth

THIS WEEK'S CREATION MOMENT

The Gift of Words

"And hath made of one blood all nations of men for to dwell on all the face of the earth..." - Acts 17:26

If we were made by a Creator who values communication, we would expect to have some built-in language skills. In fact, common features among all languages would also support the Bible's historical account of how humans once had only one language.

Researchers who studied human methods of communication around the world learned that all people have far more in common with one another than can be explained by simple biology. Linguists have noted that all languages have verbs, nouns and similar phrase structures. Certain consonants in English serve as stop sounds for words. When researchers tested African infants who had never heard English, they found that those infants recognized the same boundaries as American infants.

Not only is language universal to humans, but every human language follows the same basic rules. Some scientists now theorize that present human languages are all built on a single universal language pattern.

They have also noted one more important fact. While you can coax an ape to learn a limited vocabulary by bribing it, human children learn 150 new words per week simply for the joy of learning language. No biological theory of origins can explain this rapid language acquisition. The Bible's history of humanity offers the only explanation for human languages.
